OBJECTS AND AIMS OF THE SOCIETY.

This Society adopts as the fundamental principle of its Constitution the establishment of Political, Social, and Industrial Rights of Women and Men.

It recognises as indispensable the possession by Women of the Parliamentary Vote on the same terms as it is or may be granted to men. It demands from the Government immediate legislation to secure this condition.

It pledges itself to oppose the Government in power until such legislation is undertaken or a satisfactory guarantee given.

The further aim of the Society is to expose individual cases of injustice and to take active means to remedy the same, and to bring to the knowledge of the public the inefficiency of the Law in dealing with the White Slave Traffic, the unmarried mother, and kindred evils.

All women in trouble are given instant relief without red tape or officialdom.

To the HON. SECRETARY,

Please add my name to the Membership of the MEN'S SOCIETY FOR WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

PREFACE.

Amongst the varied activities of the Women's Industrial Council there is no branch of our work so full of surprises as that which endeavours to supply enquirers with useful information about industrial women. Not only do these questions throw an intimate light on the nature of the problems which are occupying the thoughts and discussions of students of social conditions, but the search for material available to solve these problems discloses much that is unexpected. It is to meet some of the needs of these enquirers and to reveal some of the discoveries we have made that the work of compiling this bibliography has been undertaken.

The most important thing which struck us, and must strike anyone who uses this volume in the serious study of any women's question, is the scanty amount of material available. This may surprise those who glance at the 107 odd pages of this volume with their serried ranks of references, but a survey of the bibliographies quoted as dealing with any similarly important subject, such as Strikes, Housing, etc., will at once shew the difference.

A closer scrutiny of the lists will reveal another remarkable fact, namely, the tendency to overlook the really important differences between men and women and to treat questions as though there were only one sex. It would, no doubt, make these matters much simpler if that were so, but we have to deal with the world as it is, and a discussion on this assumption does not cover the whole ground and tends to lead to erroneous results. An illustration will perhaps make the point clearer. The Insurance Act, about which we were all cudgelling our brains three years ago, was designed to cover all industrial workers irrespective of sex, and consequently one scheme was drawn up to meet all cases. Allowances had, of course, to be made for the obvious facts that women earn much less than men and also that they often marry and give up their work. These inconvenient habits were allowed for on the one hand by lower contributions and benefits, and on the other by extremely complicated financial and other arrangements which no one troubled to understand except under compulsion; and thereby it was thought the matter was settled. Unfortunately, what might have been expected happened, and the fact that there were two different sexes insured under similar conditions, as though there were only one, asserted itself with decidedly inconvenient results. If only it had been realized at the outset that women are different from men, much trouble, not to say expense, might have been avoided.

But the framers of the Insurance Act were only following in the footsteps of nearly all other social reformers.

There is another equally erroneous tendency, which, realizing that women differ from men in that they require special treatment, thinks that they can therefore be dealt with on the same lines as the other class which is distinguished from men in the same way, namely, that of juvenile workers. How often when examining a book on social problems, has the index revealed one entry alone dealing with women, namely, "Women and children, protection of," as though the needs of women and children were identical, even in respect of this one matter. It need hardly be added that, as would no doubt be right if only one rule could be made, the needs of the young people are made the first consideration.

At other times the interests of women and of the community are held to be identical. There is, for instance, hardly any discussion of the problem of married women's work, which so much as touches on the woman's point of view. The effect on the race alone is considered. The effect on the women themselves, which after all has its bearing on the race too, is quite ignored.

Indeed it is the absence of the woman's point of view which has struck us over and over again in this compilation. Many an interesting article dealing with questions of vital importance to working women has had to be omitted because their existence was ignored. Many have been included when they contained a brief paragraph, which did no more than indicate the existence of a problem which the writer did not feel called upon to do more than mention.

It must in fairness be said that women themselves are in part to blame for this neglect. Too often have they been content to let others manage their affairs for them; too often have they failed to press forward their own particular needs.

The difficulty of women's problems has no doubt made many shrink from tackling them with the seriousness which they deserve, and those who are courageously attempting the task need far more support. It is partly in the hope that a revelation of the need may induce others to join in the attempt that this volume has been prepared.

Some explanation must be given of the method adopted in selecting and arranging the material which is in existence. As already mentioned, with the exception of a few standard authorities, only those works have been included which attempt to give, or at least to recognise, women's special point of view in dealing with the matter under discussion. The large number of publications relating exclusively to the industrial interests of men have, therefore, been omitted. American, Australian and Canadian, as well as French, German and Italian books and papers, treating of industrial conditions affecting women in England have been given as far as possible. Two serious difficulties, however, presented themselves in our attempt to survey the foreign literature on our subject, first of all its inaccessibility, and secondly, though only as far as Germany is concerned, its bulk. The British Museum, of course, contains a great mass of books and papers of all sorts, though even here much that is important from our special point of view is missing, and it requires the knowledge of an expert to dig out all the material which is available. The other English library which contains the most matter suitable for our purpose is that at the London School of Economics. Much interesting periodical literature, as well as books and pamphlets, are easily accessible here, though anything approaching completeness can hardly be either attained or expected. An arrangement made on our initiative with the International Labour Office at Bâle to receive and file all the papers which that office was itself unable to keep, promises to add enormously to the value of our English collection.

There are, of course, more specialist libraries, such as that of the Royal Statistical Society and the small but valuable collections at the British Institute of Social Service and the British Section of the International Association for Labour Legislation, but in view of the interest and importance which attaches to the observations and comments of foreign experts on our industrial conditions, it is much to be hoped that opportunities for becoming acquainted with foreign writings will soon be increased.

The difficulty of bulk only affects Germany, which possesses such a mass of trade papers containing sound technical articles that even an important library like that of the Soziales Museum, attached to the new University of Frankfurt a/M., can only keep a selection of them. Some of these articles have been included in our lists in order to introduce students to the rich field which awaits them if they can pursue their studies abroad, but completeness has not even been attempted, especially as hardly any of the papers can be seen in England.

As regards arrangement, the table of contents shews clearly the subject headings under which the references have been grouped. We have aimed at making these as few as possible, in order that all the works which might be wanted in any particular connection should, as far as possible, be found together. But, of course, the subjects all overlap. And as regards the niche of many of the references, quot homines, tot sententiae. Readers are therefore warned that it will be useful to refer to kindred subject headings, if they fail to find all they want in the first list studied.

In conclusion, we wish to emphasize the fact that this little book makes no pretension at completeness. It is not intended for experts and authorities, but for the ordinary person who wishes to begin a study of this little known, but promising field. No one knows its imperfections better than ourselves, and we beg those who use it, even though they may 'bless' us, to send us on a post card any correction or addition which will help fellow students. To those who wish for further lists of publications on these and allied subjects, it may be of interest to know that a Classified Index longer than the one here printed is at their service.

Finally, our best thanks are due to our many collaborators, first and foremost to Mrs. Lamont, who nobly undertook the most important task of proof correcting. Her accuracy and patience has saved many a student tracking a reference from a wild goose chase due to printer's errors; to Professor Dr. Bauer, of the International Association for Labour Legislation, and to all the Librarians who have staggered under piles of dusty volumes for our benefit; also to all those who have assisted us in the tedious task of copying and other clerical work. Without the help of all these our task could hardly have been completed.

N.B.—The task of compiling this Bibliography was completed at the end of July and every effort was made to include all relevant publications up to that date. It is thus a "pre-war" production and contains no references to the emergency measures which have been taken since then to deal with the recent unprecedented industrial conditions. We venture to hope, however, that our work will be none the less useful on that account. Economic factors are just as powerful as military ones in determining the final issues of international struggles; and a correct knowledge and understanding of them is therefore vital. Moreover so large a number of men have been withdrawn from industrial life that the work of women in industry has increased proportionally in importance. We feel therefore that any signpost into this but partially known territory will be of use.

Again, the wise decision to make every effort to carry on national life and work as far as possible under normal conditions renders descriptions and discussions of the normal state of affairs as appropriate, and indeed more appropriate now, than accounts of emergency measures.

No doubt industrial, like all other, conditions will be altered, fundamentally as well as rapidly as a result of the tremendous upheaval we are experiencing. But new conditions will only be sound if they are built up on what is good and well-matured in the old ones.

We therefore send out our small contribution in the firm hope that it will be of some use in affording guidance both for the difficult time in which we now are, and for the reconstruction which still lies before us.

THE WOMEN'S MUNICIPAL PARTY.

Chairman: THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.

The Women's Municipal Party exists to encourage and support the election of women to the L.C.C., London Borough Councils and Boards of Guardians.

It believes that the welfare of the whole community depends on the co-operation of men and women in local administration.

It is specially concerned with all municipal efforts to improve the conditions of the women and children of London.

Where such efforts are inadequate it seeks to stimulate them by educating women to a knowledge of their powers and duties as citizens, and by electing women to the local governing body.

It is opposed to Party Politics in Local Government.

The Executive Committee and Council are representative of all shades of opinion, and include: The Lady Aberconway, The Lady Frances Balfour, Mrs. Banister Fletcher, The Countess Brassey, Miss Margaret Bondfield, Mrs. H. B. Irving, Mrs. Scharlieb, M.D., The Countess of Selborne, Mrs. Bernard Shaw, Mrs. Philip Snowden, and many others.

The Women's Municipal Party urges the women of London to make an organised effort towards the improvement of conditions in their city by becoming members of the Party (minimum annual subscription 6d.) and by sending the names of sympathisers to the Office.

THE WOMEN'S MUNICIPAL PARTY.

Organiser: Mrs. Stanbury.

Secretary: Mrs. G. F. Abbott.
